

DESERT SEES THE LAST FIRE DANCE OF THE SABOBAS

Down in the desert of southern California the last fire dance of the Sabobas Indians has just been held. It is known as the Fiesta of the Dead.

It was held this year in honor of Ma-ta-wer, the chief of the Mesa Grande tribe of Indians, who died last September.

Ma-ta-wer died without a successor of direct lineage. He carried with him to the grave the "Story of Creation" and other tribal secrets and his death means the end of the fire dance for the repose of the souls of the departed.

The fire dance was a three-day orgy at the foot of Mount San Jacinto, and more than 1000 members of the rapidly dying-out Yumas, Copallis, Northern Yaquis, Moquis and Sabobas tribes were in attendance.

There was lots of gambling and horse racing and games of all kinds. The climax came, however, when from sunset to dawn on the last day the fire dance took place.

Six old bucks, bareheaded, barefooted and with little on save their breech-clouts, came in a waving, sinuous line from the shelter of the ramada.

Clear up to the very rim of the huge, brightly blazing campfire they danced, then back, keeping time all the while on a slow, eerie chant.

Above, below, beneath was the blackness of Stygian night; only in front, where the campfire leaped and surged, was there any light; and against its red curtain the bodies of the half-naked men, wrinkled and seamed with age, glided back and forward.

Then all at once, throwing both his hands high over his head, the leader of the band, old Labala, pitched forward into the coals. There he lay, sprang to his feet and danced amid the flaming embers, and then stepped forward, his frenzy gone, but his body unburned.

Others followed him, even to men with all their clothing. Next day the thing was seemingly forgotten by all the tribesmen, who merely shook their heads when asked about it and said that the staying of the powers of the flaming fire was the business of the spirits.

MT. HOOD RAILWAY WILL OUTRIVAL PIKE'S PEAK LINE

Portland, Ore., Nov. 20.—The famous scenic railway up Pike's Peak, in Colorado, is to have a rival.

Arrangements have been made, and surveys are now in the field for the building of two electric railways up Mt. Hood far above the snow line and as near to the summit as the rails can be safely laid.

Mr. Hood, whose snow-capped peak towers 11,244 feet above sea level, is 145 miles from Portland. One line will run directly to Mt. Hood from Portland, following a route up the eastern side of the great mountain, with its terminal in the vicinity of the famous "Cloud Cap Inn," while the other route will wind upward on the western side from the Hood river valley to Government Camp.

The roads are to be built by rival companies and both are to be completed by the opening date of the Alaskan-Yukon-Pacific Exposition at Seattle in 1909.

Each summer thousands of tourists visit Mt. Hood, and heretofore they have been compelled to make the ascent on foot or on mule mounts. To Cloud Cap Inn, thence to the summit up the glacial trail on foot with alpenstock and caked snowboots.

PILES CURED IN 6 TO 14 DAYS. PAZO OINTMENT is guaranteed to cure any case of Itching, Blind, Bleeding or Protruding Piles in 6 to 14 days or money refunded. 50c.
